A retailer selling your personal information to others for profit	x	x	x			x

Summary:

The behavior of retailer selling personal information to others breaks the public principle because personal information of any persons, not matter if they are the clients should be saved, collected and used illegally. Selling personal information is illegal and violates the interests of the public. Besides, this behavior also violates the clients' interest because retailer is supposed to protect the client's personal information if clients come there to buy something. This manner is not in the best interests of the clients.

Also, selling personal information either intentionally or unintentionally means that the software product has some flaws so that the retailer can make use of then to acquire and sell personal information. Then this behavior also breaks the product principle. And this behavior breaks professional principle because it does not maintain the integrity and reputation of the developers. This will affect their credibility of their own and their later products
